

1 Equity-like growth with more down-side protection

Has historically provided equity-like long-term growth with better downside protection.

2 Outperformance during rising rate environments

Performance characteristics different from traditional bonds helps allow high-yield bonds offset portfolio interest rate exposure, outperforming traditional bonds during periods of rising interest rates.

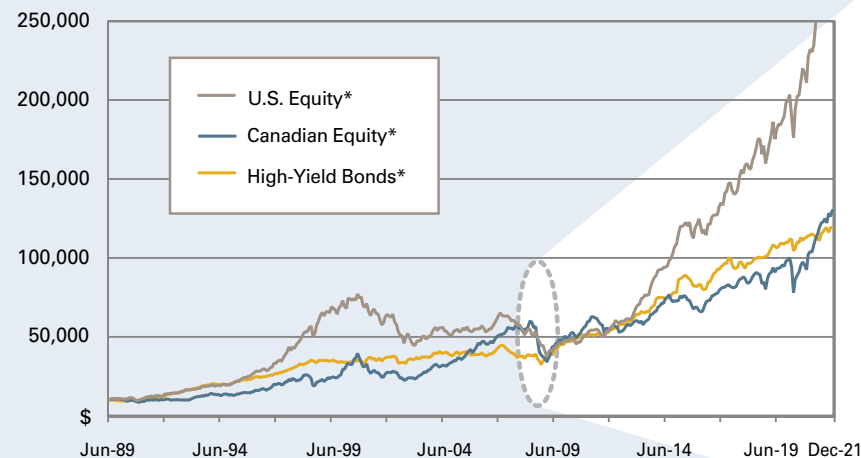

3 Less risk with improving credit fundamentals

Declining corporate debt-to-equity ratio over the past 20 years means companies have stronger balance sheets making high-yield bonds arguably less risky than in the past.
